

1. Cranberries are one of North America's native fruits (concord grapes and blueberries are two others).

- 2. There are five states in the United States which are the largest producers of cranberries — Wisconsin, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Oregon and Washington. Together they harvest more than seven million barrels of cranberries each fall. One barrel equals 100 pounds.
- 3. The early settlers gave the cranberry its modern name. To them, the pink cranberry blossoms resembled the heads of cranes; therefore the word "craneberry," later contracted to "cranberry."

- 4. Cranberry vines will bear fruit indefinitely with proper care. Some cranberry marshes have vines that are over 100 years old.
- 5. It takes three to five years for a new marsh to produce a crop.
- 6. Cranberry harvest begins mid-September and extends for a few weeks. In the early days, the fruit was picked by hand and the whole town turned out for the harvest.

Some modern machines have teeth that gently lift the berries from the vines. While other types of machines agitate the water with enough force to dislodge the berries.

- 8. Cranberries contain vitamin C. Long ago, sailors ate cranberries to prevent a disease named scurvy.
- 9. Growers protect and manage over 180,000 acres of wetlands in Wisconsin. While cranberries are actually grown on about 18,000 of those acres, the remaining support property provides valuable habitat where plant and animal life flourish.
- 10. Cranberries have long been Wisconsin's #1 fruit crop. The cranberry growing tradition has been passed down by Wisconsin families since the mid 1800s. In April of 2004, the cranberry was named Wisconsin's official state fruit.
